

atic. The shall will deprive us of the mallets creaminess – or else we miss out on the parsleyed garlic butter.

It's easy to mock the practice of freedom, to ridicule it by naming the heroes who died in its name, the revolutions fought to attain it, the bloody wars carried out in its defence, the wild repressions to stifle it. It's easy, but this banal initial offer, you may choose a unique composition. And not only choose but also measure. Picking from one or the other bowl, a pickle or a radish here, an olive or a caper there. That's quintessential individuality. Just as all human beings are made of identical atoms and united for an instant in a unique and ephemeral configuration that
